

Here is the Granddaddy of them all. The very first Anonstar Commercial Parody. It came about when Mr. Don't-Mention-Me Dixon fed detrimental information to a Bible Institute student who was in a doctrinal debate with Dr. Evans, when I came to Dr. Evans' defense. Greg Dixon, who was receiving the debate e-mails, decided to try to neutralize me with his "packet" to this student. Because of this, Greg became known as "Pac-man." It is based on the radio On-star commercials. We do apologize to On-star for debasing their name with this parody.

This anonymous phone conversation took place on or about July 19, 2004 between an Anon-Star Advisor and A-Non Subscriber:

GD: Hey, young Bible Institute Student, this is your Anon-Star Advisor. May I help you?

JN: Aren't I supposed to call you when I need you?

GD: Quiet and Listen, I have a surprise packet for you on the way to help you win your battle with Evans and Townsend.

JN: Well, okay. Thanks!

GD: Jeff, just don't 'mention my name'."

JN: Oh, I won't, it'll just be between Townsend and me. You'll be kept anonymous. Besides, I'll just use this to show grace and forgiveness that he didn't show me.

GD: Right. Now, if he goes public with this and tries to deny it, I'll jump right in and expose him. So don't worry. Besides, he won't go public. He doesn't want Evans, who he is trying to resurrect himself with, to know.

JN: You are so right, Anon-Star. I'm so sure about this and your 'reliability' that I may even write him early and give him a chance to surrender.

GD: No, don't do that. I want it 'abundantly clear' that I am only doing this to help you defend yourself against what he did to poor little you. What you do with your packet is up to you. My hands are washed after this.

JN: Thanks, but don't 'swear me to secrecy'. I'm no man's patsy.

GD: I won't do that. Just DON'T MENTION MY NAME!, or JUMP THE GUN!, or there'll be a packet on you someday... something about a 'pathological jump-the-gunner.'

Anon-Star, always there, because you're always unrepentant...