

Note: Joey Faust is the advocate of Christians burning in Hell for the thousand year Millennial reign of Christ. His advisor is Greg Dixon, who wrote a blurb for Faust's book and has preached this past year that he believes in Kingdom Exclusion, even though he tells others "he is still studying the subject." Faust had a debate scheduled with Jeff Nachimson of Florida until he realized that Jeff is a Bible Institute Student, then he backed out of the debate. The twist is that Dixon originally gave Jeff a packet of information against Ben Townsend, and became known far and wide as "Pac-Man." This is a take-off on the "On-star" radio commercials.

Sometime in the future around June 2005:

GD: "This is your Anon-Star Advisor, Greg Dixon. How may I be of service to you today?"

JF: "Yeah, Greg, I was having some trouble, since I challenged a young Bible Institute student, without knowing he was a student.

GD: "What kind of debate?"

JF: "Well, I'm a Kingdom Exclusionist and a Lake of Fire for Christians advocate, and I'm supposed to argue this against some guy named Jeff Nachimson."

GD: "How can I help you today?"

JF: "I think that I will have a difficult time answering his really tough Scriptures, and..."

GD: "Hey, you're in luck. I have a packet I put together with some public records about this guy. How dare he use those 'tactics' against you. That's just downright 'unfair'."

JF: "I don't know if I need the packet or not. I mean the guy is not name-calling or anything."

GD: "I'm glad, but take the packet anyway, just in case you want to show him what true forgiveness is really like."

JF: "Oh, good idea. Can I mention who gave this to me?"

GD: "No, DON'T MENTION MY NAME!"

JF: "Okay. Where'd you get this stuff?"

GD: "I have packets on just about everybody."

JF: "Do you have one on Herb Evans? Now there's a guy I definitely need a packet to even out our debates."

GD: “Sorry, Herb is too above board, for me to be believed.

JF: “Well, it never hurts to ask. Thank you so much, Anon-Star, I mean ‘Packet-man’.”.

GD: “Is there anything else I can do for you today...”

Anon-Star, Always there, because there’s always dirt.
